

CHAPTER II
THE EASTERN LINES

COLONIZATION.—When Mu, the Motherland, became overcrowded, or, among her great navigators, some ambitious and enterprising company found new and available lands, a colonial development was started. These emigrant children of Mu were called Mayas. All who left the Motherland in any direction were called Mayas. Colonization must have started at least 70,000 years before Mu sank, for there are Naacal writings in the Orient stating that the Holy Brothers carried the religion and the sciences of the Motherland to the colonies "over 70,000 years ago." One of these colonies was said to "have a population of 35,000,000 people."

From the remains of man of great antiquity found in all parts of the earth, and of which in many cases a fragmentary history is given in the form of symbolic writings, tableaux, tablets and in ancient documents, I am enabled to plot out the courses or lines taken by the colonists from the Motherland. From these remains it is very clearly shown that two main directions of colonization were followed, with many branches from the main lines, and many independent short lines. The two main directions were east and west from Mu. I have found no records showing which of these directions was first commenced, or the approximate date when Mu's first colony was established. The date of only one colony is to be found so far, the Maya Colony on the Nile Delta in Egypt, which was set-tied about 16,000 years ago. Records point to the possibil-
